

Table of contents

Ferenc Laczó

Introduction — 1

Part I: The Rupture of 1933 and New Expressions of Jewishness in the Age of Nazi Germany

Ines Koeltzsch

Utopia as Everyday Practice

Jewish Intellectuals and Cultural Translation in Prague before and after 1933 — 15

Marija Vulesica

What Will Become of the German Jews?

National Socialism, Flight and Resistance in the Intellectual Debate of Yugoslav
Zionists in the 1930s — 45

Gábor Schein

'Jewishness' in the Diary of Milán Füst — 71

Part II: Modernity and the Search for Identity

Eszter Gantner

The New Type of Internationalist

The Case of Béla Balázs — 91

Małgorzata A. Quinkenstein

'Europe' – It's such a strange word for me!

A Portrait of Arthur Bryks against the Background of the Events of the Mid-Twentieth Century — 113

Camelia Crăciun

'Virtually ex nihilo'

The Emergence of Yiddish Bucharest during the Interwar Period — 133

Part III: Unprecedented Catastrophe and Lines of Discursive Continuity

Clara Royer

A Liberal Utopia Against All Odds

The Survivor Writers of The Progress (Haladás), 1945–1948 — 155

Ferenc Laczó

From European Fascism to the Fate of the Jews

Early Hungarian Jewish Monographs on the Holocaust — 175

Ilse Josepha Lazaroms

Across the Rupture

Jewish Survivor-Writers and the Landscapes of War in Post-war East-Central Europe — 205

Part IV: From Utopias to Post-war Trajectories

Tamás Scheibner

From the Jewish Renaissance to Socialist Realism

Imre Keszi in the Thrall of Utopias — 223

Felicia Waldman

Avatars of Being a Jewish Professor at the University of Bucharest in the First Half of the Twentieth Century — 263

Karolina Szymaniak

Rachel Auerbach, or the Trajectory of a Yiddishist Intellectual in Poland in the First Half of the Twentieth Century — 304

List of Contributors — 353